

WASHINGTON- Congressman Lee Terry (R-NE) is one of the most bipartisan Republicans in the House of Representatives according to a survey done by The Hill newspaper. The newspaper surveyed more than 100 Members of the House over the past few months.

"I pride myself in always working with both parties to find solutions to the important issues facing our country," said Congressman Terry. "Every time I introduce legislation I like to have a Democratic co-sponsor. I will continue to work with my Democratic colleagues while still adhering to my basic conservative principles. The American public deserves representatives who can put partisan politics aside and be effective legislators."

Most bipartisan Republicans (listed alphabetically):

Judy Biggert (Ill.)

Bob Inglis (S.C.)

Walter Jones (N.C.)

Steven LaTourette (Ohio)

John McHugh (N.Y.)

John Mica (Fla.)

Ron Paul (Texas)

Lee Terry (Neb.)

Fred Upton (Mich.)

Bill Young (Fla.)
