

Omaha, NE - During a meeting on health care reform on Tuesday night, Republican Congressman Lee Terry hears more than a handful of heated comments. The majority of them support his position.

At his town hall meeting inside Millard North High School, the Congressman addressed questions about the cost of public health care and the constitutional rights many believe it violates.

In the minority, those for Obama's vision of a single payer system. Some were nearly booed out of the auditorium by health care plan opponents.

Congressman Terry tells Action 3 News he is for health care reform, but only if it doesn't increase the power and size of government.
