

Omaha (KPTM) - Facebook, Myspace and Twitter, they're all popular among youngsters and even adults.

But now these sites are getting the attention of politicians.

One politician here in Nebraska is getting into the Facebook frenzy.

"I figured if my kids are on Facebook, then maybe I should too." C

Congressman Lee Terry has been on Facebook just for a few months.

He says it's a good way to keep everyone updated on what he's doing.

"In a capacity I can tell people what I did today as your congressman but it also gives me a way to communicate with my constituents."

Terry says his colleagues in Washington are also looking into making Facebook profiles.

That's after an ethics law that was passed in January.

"As long as you're not campaigning, asking for dollars, inviting them to campaign events, those types of things are specifically excluded and frankly I don't think many of my friends are going to miss being invited to a campaign fundraiser."

Terry says he has done things like set up tours at the nations capitol and has even caught up with a few old friends from the past.

He says everyday he finds out something new.

"I'm learning it day by day and I like using it in different ways. That's the neat part about using facebook as a congressional resource is its dynamic enough to where you can change it."

It's that change Terry knows will change the face of politics.

With more local at nine Nathan Moore along with photographers Jason Pressler and M.H. Denker, KPTM Fox News

Not only are politicians getting into the Facebook mode, but some cities like Bellevue are making a page to let people know what's going on in the city.

We also have a facebook page it's kptm Fox News.

