WASHINGTON, May 31 (UPI) -- Representatives from both the Democratic and Republican parties expressed concern Thursday over pending international proposals to regulate the Internet.

"We're all in agreement on this one," said U.S. Rep. Lee Terry, R-Neb.

At a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee meeting, Democrats and Republicans affirmed support for the Internet's free and pluralist structure, which they said provides for the unfettered flow of communication and serves as a vital tool for global economic development.

"The Internet continues to grow and flourish thanks to its open structure and its multi-stakeholder approach to governance," said Rep. Anna Eshoo, D-Calif. "It is one of the great success stories of American history."...
