

VA's Delays are Concern

Among the paramount obligations of the nation is to take care of veterans who served it. That is the goal of a project to build a new veterans hospital in Omaha.

Easy to say, tough to do, given the delays and cost overruns evident in similar projects across the country and in the proposed Omaha hospital itself.

The 60-year-old Omaha facility is too small, and its physical plant is showing its age. Despite that, doctors, nurses and other hospital personnel get good marks for the care they give veterans and the concern they show.
